At Its Parents' Rejoicing Was Turned to Mourning, for the Little One Passed Away After Ten Hours' Life.

BABY CASTELLUZZO, if you please, back from the dead for awhile, to the cradle, alive and well. Then back again to a cold coffin. Singular, you say, but almost true. Think of a mite of a boy, born dead, according to the midwife diagnosis, and then opening his eyes and crowing for help in the cold storage room of the Morgue, surrounded by babies really dead.

In four dark, grimy rooms of a big tenement house at No. 241 Elizabeth street live Benedetto Castelluzzo, his pretty wife and two little girls. They are no different from a thousand other families in that congested neighborhood. The husband works hard by day for his living and his wife looks after the home. They are devoted

THE MOTHER

Washington, Nov. 1.—That Admiral Dewey is willing to accept the nomination for the Presidency from the Republican National convention is the substance of a statement made by Colonel Archibald Hopkins.

Colonel Hopkins made this statement while denying the story that in his recent poem toasting the Admiral at a dinner he predicted the latter's nomination for and election to the Presidency, and that on the Admiral hearing of this he saw the verses

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 1.—John R. McLean this afternoon refused to ride on the same train with Senator Maxwell A. Hanna, Hanna was booked for a speech at Dayton this afternoon and one at Springfield to-night. McLean was billed to speak at Dayton.

It was planned by the local Republican managers, when they heard of McLean's intention, to have Hanna call upon him in his car while en route. The effect of a conference between Hanna and McLean, they calculated, would not injure the Republicans.

It might incalculably damage the Democratic chances by creating an inference that Hanna and McLean understood each other. When McLean was advised of the plan he at once refused to go on the train that carried the Senator. McLean ordered a special train and was soon en route for Dayton in his own private car.

Hanna Caused Fatal Riot.
A strong statement was issued to-day by John Johns, a well known mining leader of Steubenville, Mr. Johns, among other things, said:

"Hanna owned what was known as the Pan Handle mines, situated on the P., C., Y. R. R., in the Pittsburgh district. In the month of February, 1894, he tried to force the miners employed at his mine to accept 90 cents per ton, a reduction of 9 cents per ton, or 27 cents per day, all in direct violation of an agreement made in Columbus at a joint conference between mine and operators. This was the cause of a strike that produced a riot in that valley, with the result that two men lost their lives."

Hanna Tells of Treachery.
Cleveland, O., Nov. 1.—Before Senator Hanna left this city yesterday he declared that there was no longer any doubt but that the followers of Mayor McKisson are working tooth and nail against the Republican State ticket.

"There is no use concealing the fact," he added. "It is better to have the public know where their men stand than to seek a compromise by concealing the truth. For one, I like to fight in the open, and naturally an well pleased when I find out how my enemies are lining up."

"Some days ago I heard rumors of a bolt on the part of these treacherous McKissonites. I heard that certain county candidates had been making speeches against the head of the ticket. These rumors have been run down and proved correct."

"The most serious rumor has been that McKisson men were working actively for Jones. A quiet investigation also proved the truth of this rumor. It was learned that not only are these traitors working for Jones, but that they are doing their work in the most objectionable manner possible."

TAKEN TO THE MORGUE

PUT INTO THE COLD CELL. 30° FAR.

DISCOVERED BY HIS CRIES

IN THE HOSPITAL.

The Life History of the Strangest Born Baby.
It came into the world about 1 a. m. yesterday with a twin brother. The midwife said they were dead. The father took them in a macaroni box to the Morgue at dawn. They were placed in the cold storage room, where the air is at freezing point. Three hours later the baby was crying. It was wrapped in blankets in Bellevue Hospital and its young parents were overjoyed. But its first taste of life had been so cold that at 7 p. m. its little soul fled back to the spirit world.

to one another; indeed, their happiness is the talk of a neighborhood in which domestic discord is by no means uncommon.

She Sings as She Works.
Mrs. Castelluzzo is scarcely twenty-five years old. She has the olive tint, the lustrous black hair and great wide eyes of sunny Italy. The neighbors say that her whole life is given to her husband and her children and the halls of the dusty and ill-smelling old tenement ring with the notes of her music. She has no time to keep busy with her household work. To this happy little family arrived Rosa Novese, a midwife, of No. 35 Stanton street, at midnight of Tuesday. She had been there many minutes when two boys were born. The midwife said they were dead. They were the first sign of vitality in their little bodies.

At 4 o'clock yesterday morning Rosa Novese examined the babies again and cleared that beyond all doubt they were dead. Papa Castelluzzo was all but disheartened, and the mother, who had set her heart upon a boy, went into hysterics. At 5 o'clock Castelluzzo tenderly placed a little bodies in an empty macaroni box, and boarding a Second Avenue car, went to the Morgue. The certificate was presented to Keeper John Payne, who glanced the bodies in the box and sent a keeper to take them to the cold room for dead infants, at the end of the corridor.

Three Hours in the Cold.
It seemed mighty fortunate that Payne had business three hours and fifteen minutes later in that storage room for dead babies.

It was 9:15 when he went there to get a coffin for a new arrival.

To be an uncomfortable place, this room, with its iron doors, its black slate floors and walls dripping with moisture. It is called the refrigerator, because the temperature stands at 32 degrees, and if you stay there for a moment the air freezes your breath into clouds of white moisture. The only light that ever creeps in is when the door is opened. This shows heaps of little pine coffins piled one upon another, each awaiting its turn for a bit of ground in Father's Field.

The iron door creaked and into this narrow room Payne stepped for an empty pine box. Policeman Morrell was standing outside. Payne was about to leave when a little cry from a very small voice broke the chilly silence of the room. It was so like the mew of old Jerry, the Morgue cat, that Payne stopped.

"I guess Jerry has mixed himself up with these coffins somewhere," said he.

But Jerry, as if to remove all doubts, scampered across the tiled floor from the office and landed at the door.

"Here is Jerry, all right," Morrell said. Again came that weird little cry of distress, almost at Payne's feet.

The cold sweat came out on his face.

"Morrell," he cried, "is there a live baby in this box, or an a-dreaming?"

"There is something doing here, sure," said the policeman.

Even the Cat Started.
Then came the half-smothered, plaintive cry once more, and the cat, Jerry, leaping over coffins, stopped at a box at Payne's feet.

There was a live baby in the room reserved and kept apart for dead babies. It came from the box, and in a jiffy the cover was off.

There, nestling close to the still body of his dead brother, was the baby Castelluzzo, struggling for life. His bare arms were stretched upward over his head, and a cry loud and clear, as if to emphasize the disapproval of his surroundings, came up from his little lungs.

Fayne and Morrell stood half paralyzed for a moment, then called the doctor to a warm room and summoned assistance.

One baby was dead—there was no doubt of that—but his twin brother was very much alive. Under the warmth of the steam radiator he curled his little legs up to his chin, swung his chubby fists, and cried like any healthy baby who wants something and will not be satisfied until he gets it.

The baby was taken to the ward for infants in Bellevue Hospital, and after three hours in a refrigerator with the temperature at 32 degrees, the freezing point, he was warmed into lusty life.

Parents Overjoyed.
After Fayne and Morrell had awakened from the shock they sent word to the parents of the child that had been officially declared dead.

Castelluzzo was by his wife's side when Rose Tomella heard the news on the stairway, and with three leaps, as she says, she was in the room. She gazed out the box into Mrs. Castelluzzo raised her hands in prayer and cried out her gratitude to the Almighty. She started from her bed and said she would go to the Morgue.

"Watch her," said the husband in Italian to Rose as, trembling with excitement, he ran to the door.

News in this neighborhood travels fast, and before Castelluzzo reached the street the way was blocked by men, women and children who refused to believe the news.

"Make way, make way!" cried the father in his native tongue. "One of the boys is alive!"

Halfless he ran to the Second Avenue cars and in a few minutes was at the gates of the Bellevue, clamoring for admission. The gatekeeper thought that he had a lunatic in the person of the god-damning man who could speak but a few words of English. "Ma wanta da boy, ma wanta da babe!" he cried.

"What's that?" cried the keeper.

"Oliva ma da boy, da boy!" cried the father again and again until a messenger who had heard the story took him to the iron bed, wrapped in cotton and flannels to his ears.

Father Frantic with Joy.
Castelluzzo fairly fell over the bed, and would have carried the baby away in his arms if he had not been restrained. "The Italian vocabulary of pet names was fairly exhausted by this father, who returned prayers and thanks for the strange miracle. Then he returned to his home and told the story to the mother, who could hardly be kept in bed.

Among the neighbors there was but one explanation. It was a miracle—a miracle of All Saints' Day—that had actually brought his baby back from death. It was the and asked for the expurgation of the political prediction.

This, Colonel Hopkins said, is untrue. The Admiral never saw the verses; they never contained a political prediction; they were delivered as originally written.

Colonel Hopkins explained that he knew the Admiral's dislike for politics, and that the latter had several times expressed his distaste to a nomination for the Presidency. The colonel said that he felt satisfied, however, that if Ohio went Democratic this Fall and other critical States did the same, and that it should appear that the Republican party was in danger of defeat at the national election next year, and the Republican convention asked Dewey to take the nomination, the Admiral would do so to save the party and the cause of expansion.

This statement, which Colonel Hopkins now says was not made for publication, has created much comment in the circles where it has been heard. Colonel Hopkins and William Corcoran Hill, of this city, are probably closer to Dewey socially than any other two men of his acquaintance.

It is significant in this connection, however, that if Ohio went Democratic this Fall and other critical States did the same, and that it should appear that the Republican party was in danger of defeat at the national election next year, and the Republican convention asked Dewey to take the nomination, the Admiral would do so to save the party and the cause of expansion.

WOMEN TO TAKE PART IN THE AUTOMOBILE RUN.
Three Score Carriages Expected to Appear in the Parade on November 4.

There was a meeting of the Automobile Club last night at the Waldorf-Astoria, and at its close Alfred T. Roosevelt issued instructions for the automobile run which will take place on November 4.

Owners of carriages to take part are asked to be at the Thirty-fourth street entrance to the hotel at 1 p. m. sharp. Arrangements have been made for a removal of motive power in case of emergency.

Ample accommodations have been made for the women who will participate. Many ladies have signified their intention.

The route selected is to Madison square, to Fifth Avenue, to One Hundred and Thirty-third street, to Morningside Park, to Riverside Drive, to the Claremont Hotel, where a stop will be made. The return is down Riverside Drive to Seventy-second street, to Broadway, to the Grand Circle, to Fifty-ninth street, to the plaza at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth street. Three score automobiles will participate for a certainty.

DEWEY DAY A RECORD SMASHER FOR RAILROADS.
New Haven, Nov. 1.—An idea of the number of Connecticut people who visited New York on Dewey Day can be gained from the quarterly report of New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad. This declares that on Dewey Day they carried 64,000 persons to New York at an average of $1.22 a head, making their total passenger receipts amount to more than $75,000 for that day.

This is the biggest day's record of travel in the history of an American railroad. Other railroad records are smashed by the quarterly report of the Consolidated line.

The increase in net earnings over the corresponding period of last year amounts to more than $1,000,000.

BOYS AFTER PARK BOOTY.
Two of a Supposed Gang Arrested for Taking Wire from Benches.

Park laborers have noticed for several days that many of the park benches have been torn apart and a watch was set. Detectives Savage and McGinty arrested yesterday Edward McDonald, eleven years old, of No. 109 East Seventy-fifth street, and Edward Doera, ten years old, of No. 304 East Seventy-third street, on the charge of breaking the benches.

The boys had made a practice of tearing away and selling the copper wire that held the woodwork together. The police believe there is an organized gang of boys at work in this way. McDonald and Doera were sent to the Gerry Society rooms.
